Make one useful change

A clearer sentence, a familiar example, a quicker setup or a better paper route can make a big difference. Keep the original beside your draft.

1. Name the resource, version, year, week or day.
2. Give the actual changed words, steps or small editable file.
3. Say why it helps, what learners practise and what you would notice.
4. Add the exact curriculum or factual source and date where relevant. Keep supported facts, your calculations, inference and unknowns separate.
5. Name the contribution's owner, intended credit and proposed sharing terms. Use invented examples; leave out learner names, photos, identifiable work and private records.

Offer your draft for review

An adult can use SubjectNest's contribution page for current instructions and its linked contact route. The page offers a 2,000-character text form and hello@neuroforge.io for longer editable attachments. Follow the current reply-email, consent and spam-check requirements. Meaningful public instructions were checked 8 October 2026; no form was submitted or inbox delivery tested.

Saving, printing or copying a draft is not submission. Offering it does not publish it or transfer its sharing rights. A reviewed edited edition is separate from this exact admitted original. Complete original source edit guidance remains available.

Keep the complete terms

Original educational material is CC BY4.0: credit, licence link and changes must travel with your edition. Original native/source software is Apache2.0. The vendored parser, fonts, renderer/library and authority have separate full grants and exceptions; no blanket permission for outside media, learner work or community-held knowledge follows. Do not infer translation, First Nations permission or attainment from a revised worksheet.

The creator reproduces this exact admitted source and rejects silently altered original identity. You can edit a separate copy and offer it under the applicable terms; it does not silently become the approved original. Keep the original full notices and mark your changes.

Original SubjectNest educational words and presentation: CC BY 4.0. Full source, legal, font and no-image companions are embedded. Keep their separate terms with any edited copy and mark changes. Supplied examples are models; no learner result is implied.
